

Do you think that the academic staff who deliver McGill's high-quality education and research should be involved in academic decisions about the university?

It is a long-standing tradition of universities to include academic staff in decision-making.

This is why AMPL is fighting for workplace democracy and collegial governance.

Do you want better access to professors and student services?

The administration has decided to pause hiring new faculty in Law (but not elsewhere) and to cut administrative positions.

These decisions negatively impact student-to-professor ratios and the overall student experience. That's why AMPL is fighting to end the hiring freeze in Law & restore administrative support.

McGill University has been trying to undermine AMPL's unionization and collective bargaining efforts at every opportunity. The administration continues to waste resources in an attempt to undermine AMPL as a certified union. This must stop.

The McGill University administration must let go of its present Master/Servant approach to employee relations and respect its unionized faculty.

Do you want to learn from Canada's best legal minds?

To continue to attract and retain the best legal minds,
McGill University must offer fair working conditions for its professors of law.

To preserve the high-quality education and research that McGill University is known for, AMPL is fighting for equitable working conditions that include:

One pension for all its members.

Salaries competitive with other top-ranked Canadian law schools.

As a graduate student, do you want access to research opportunities and someone to supervise your work?

As one of Canada's leading research universities, McGill has a responsibility to support the production of high-quality research.

To strengthen our research capacity and ensure that graduate students have a positive experience, AMPL is demanding greater support for graduate studies and research.
